The effort to create a healthier microwave popcorn has a second Hoosier connection. Indianapolis-based Dow AgroSciences LLC says it produces the canola oil that Weaver Popcorn of Noblesville is using in its new product. Dow AgroSciences President and Chief Executive Officer Antonio Galindez made the announcement at an investors conference this morning in New York City. Dow AgroSciences says the canola oil cuts saturated and total fat by 50 percent.

Galindez presented "Dow AgroSciences Growth Equation" at the UBS Global Agricultural Chemicals and Seed/Biotech Conference.

Besides the oils business, he also discussed the company's agrochemical pipeline, the seeds traits and innovation productivity.

Dow AgroSciences says "Weaver Popcorn using our healthy oil is a win-win for both businesses as we bring healthier oil to consumers."
